Prion protein gene promoter mapping in an isolate with novel point mutations. Neurodegenerative diseases are often associated with the accumulation of misfolded proteins. The prion protein (PrP) is a major component of prion proteinopathies, including sporadic, inherited and infectious Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (CJD), and some forms of fatal familial insomnia. The promoter region of the prion protein gene (PRNP) has been implicated in disease progression. Here we investigated the relationship between the promoter and the disease in an isolate with novel point mutations in the PRNP. We found that the mutations are linked to the promoter activity. The mutation p.Ala101Glu leads to an increased promoter activity and is associated with CJD. This polymorphism affects the stability of the mutant PrP-res, which leads to its aggregation. In contrast, the novel mutation p.Ala97Thr results in a reduced promoter activity and seems to have a protective effect. We suggest that the amino acid at position 97 might modulate the misfolded conformation of PrP and protect against the disease.

Q: Disable row coloring for a record if a date is the same I have a report that is created by my C# app. Some of the dates are the same (same month, same year, same week). I do not want the row colored if they are the same. I am not sure how to add this into the code below. 82157476af
